> There are several things which have made farming rather unprofitable business, the most noteworthy of which are the tariff system, and, in the South, the system of farming.

The methods in some localities pursued by the farmers in conducting their business have so frequently been shown to be unwise ones that it would seem to be unnecessary to go over the ground again. The fact which confronts Southern farmers is that they must change their methods if they would attain anything like the success which they have a right to expect. There are signs that they are becomilg alive and very much of a giant in the his devotion to his sister by giving to this lact that they must make a change.
